

Shared Decision Making

- The shared decision making process requires input from both First Nation's and Government on matters that concern them both
- Comments and input play a big part in the process and the success or outcome
- Effective communication within the shared decision making process forges relationships and builds trust
- Expectation and roles are clearly defined during the forming of decisions which help to resolve opposing views and cultures
- Shared decision making defines the risk, environmental impacts, economic benefits and limitations for both sides
